KAURI VAULT

Karin Venator - Artist and Designer

I wanted to touch base with everyone because it's been a long couple of years getting through global Covid complications! I hope you and your family are well.

As you probably know, I love variety in my work which is why I love working with ancient Kauri. Not only is every piece absolutely unique - it is precious and it literally speaks for itself. I feel my job as a designer and artist is to create a platform for the Kauri to simply be itself - to resonate, to shine and to tell its incredible and beautiful story through the lines and twists of it's very fabric.

I'd love to hear from you. Feel free to check out some of our latest work, contact me to chat about your latest project - or simply read about the fascinating New Zealand

Kauri story.

Get a 3D visual before your table is made

For further peace of mind, we offer 3D visualisation and hi-res rendering of our tables included in the price, giving you the chance to see your creation, the profile, the shape and the leg structure before it is made.

Latest work from the Vault

Carefully selected from rescued logs in Northland's beautiful Hokianga region, Karin Venator of Kauri Vault crafts ancient Kauri slabs right here in New Zealand into lovingly polished and preserved furniture pieces and exports them around the world - to ultimately turn into precious heirlooms that generations to come will admire, respect and treasure.

The New Zealand Kauri Story- Part 1: When Gum was Gold

Surprisingly, it was Kauri gum that put the mighty tree's unique properties on the world stage. Both economically and culturally significant to New Zealand from early on, the indigenous Maori used Kauri gum for torches and mixed it with soot and fat for tattooing. It was even used as chewing gum and fire starters...
